At the entrance hall of the hospital you can find a mosaic, which I have created. It is reflecting all colours which are used in the whole house. The swinging form of the mosaic invites people to enter the house without doubt and fear, which is necessary entering a hospital.

At the long corridors you can find circles on the floor, which mark the entrance to the bedrooms. So it is easy for the patients, to find the right door. The different colours in the floors lead you back to the hospital rooms. The yellow and white colored furniture in the bedrooms brings brightness, clearness and good mood into the rooms. The curved shapes of the panelling, which I created with the principles of the „Golden Section“, let the patients feel protected like in a bed with a canopy.

With this concept I created an interior, that connects the rooms of the whole building and lets patients feel protected and let them forget, that they are in a public building.
